

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased from 10.5 million to 12.5 million, and the number of people in the public sector who are employed in health care has increased from 2.5 million to 3.5 million (Department of Health 2000).

There are a number of reasons for this increase. One of the main reasons is the increasing demand for health care services. The population of the UK is ageing, and there is a growing number of people with chronic conditions such as heart disease, diabetes, and asthma. This has led to an increase in the number of people who are admitted to hospital and the length of their stays. In addition, there has been a growing emphasis on preventive care, which has led to an increase in the number of people who are seen by their general practitioners and other health care professionals.

Another reason for the increase in the number of people employed in the public sector is the increasing demand for health care services in the private sector. The private sector has grown significantly in the last few years, and this has led to an increase in the number of people who are employed in the private sector. However, the public sector still remains the largest employer in the health care sector.

There are a number of challenges facing the public sector in the future. One of the main challenges is the increasing demand for health care services. The population of the UK is ageing, and there is a growing number of people with chronic conditions. This will lead to an increase in the number of people who are admitted to hospital and the length of their stays. In addition, there will be a growing emphasis on preventive care, which will lead to an increase in the number of people who are seen by their general practitioners and other health care professionals.

Another challenge facing the public sector is the increasing demand for health care services in the private sector. The private sector has grown significantly in the last few years, and this has led to an increase in the number of people who are employed in the private sector. However, the public sector still remains the largest employer in the health care sector.

There are a number of ways in which the public sector can meet these challenges. One way is to increase the number of people who are employed in the public sector. This can be done by recruiting more people to the public sector and by providing training and development opportunities for existing staff. Another way is to improve the efficiency of the public sector. This can be done by reducing the length of hospital stays and by increasing the number of people who are seen by their general practitioners and other health care professionals.

In conclusion, the number of people employed in the public sector has increased significantly in the last few years. This is due to a number of factors, including the increasing demand for health care services and the increasing demand for health care services in the private sector. The public sector still remains the largest employer in the health care sector, but it is facing a number of challenges in the future. It is important that the public sector takes steps to meet these challenges, in order to ensure that it can continue to provide high quality health care services to the population of the UK.

JOHN McCONNELL

Born: 1763-1764, and was of Scotch Irish ancestry

Service Record: There is no record of the command and services in this case, but there is a well defined tradition that he was seven years a wagoner in the Continental Army. That at one time, when the train was taken by surprise, and was attacked by the British, by his heroic efforts only, he and his team escaped the enemy and reached the Colonial Camp. In this escape he was shot and severely wounded. He served for seven years.

of German descent. They lived first in Virginia and Tennessee, before removing to Scioto County, Ohio, and finally on to Delaware County, Indiana.

In 1832, one son, William McConnell, came to Delaware County, Indiana, entered 80 acres of Sec. 20 Twp. 20 Ra. 10, and in 1833 moved here from Scioto County, Ohio. At age 71 years, Lemuel Peterson appeared in Delaware Circuit Court, and filed an affidavit attesting to his service in the Revolutionary War. From the affidavit we learn, in March

He was drafted a second time, August 1, 1777, to serve on the same vessel until July 4, 1778, when he was discharged.

Married: The affidavit does not state, but his 18 years in the state of Delaware would indicate marital status, for he was living with his sons in Delaware County, Indiana in 1835.

We also learn from the affidavit, after his birth in 1764, in Cumberland County, New Jersey, he resided with his father and mother there until 1785, where he served in the Revolutionary War. He then moved to Kent County, Delaware, where he lived for 18 years, until 1803. He removed to Ohio and lived there until 1809.
